

FAKE REFUGEES ARE CRIMINALS!

DEPORT THEM NOW

Australia faces a huge problem with the influx of so-called refugees sailing to our shores. However, we need to ask ourselves: are these people real refugees, or are they just more illegal immigrants seeking a better life than what Third World countries can offer them?

What is the difference between a real refugee and an illegal immigrant?

- A real refugee is someone who suffers persecution, and thus flees to a neighbouring country.
- An illegal immigrant is someone who enters a country without a valid permit, in order to live in a better economic climate.

Any person escaping persecution who flees to a neighbouring country is a refugee, but if they continue their journey into, or bypass, a 3rd, 4th, or 5th country, seeking a better place to land, then they are nothing more than economic immigrants – in fact, illegal economic immigrants.

Home country	Neighbouring country	Country no. 3 (and 4, 5, 6, etc.)	Australia
Suffering persecution	Escaped from persecution	Looking for better living conditions	Looking for a better living conditions
Status: victim	Status: refugee	Status: illegal immigrant (criminal)	Status: illegal immigrant (criminal)

The only “real refugees” that could possibly come to Australia would be from countries like East Timor, Indonesia, New Zealand, or Papua New Guinea (we are unlikely to face a horde of refugees from New Zealand).

The so-called refugees we have in our detention centers, as well as any others headed for our shores, are nothing more than queue-jumpers. They have bypassed several countries to get here – because Australia has a good standard of living. They are illegal immigrants, criminals – nothing more, nothing less.

There are millions of people in poor underdeveloped countries who would love to migrate to Australia (or to any other Western democracy) but, like anyone else, they have to be assessed for suitability, skills, etc. and only a certain number can come here each year. The vast majority won't get in. We just don't have the livable area, nor the economic or social infrastructure, to handle an influx of millions. Indeed, if we adopted an "open borders" policy and let them all in, our way of life, our culture, and our society would all suffer enormously – and our fragile environment would be damaged beyond repair.

Some have said, regarding refugees seeking a better life by becoming illegal immigrants, "Wouldn't you do the same?" Possibly, an average citizen might grab a million dollars if it fell off the back of a bank van in front of them, but that would still make them a criminal. This attempt to excuse fake refugees (criminals) is just not valid.

To add insult to injury, each of these fake refugees receive legal assistance (courtesy of the long-suffering Australian taxpayer), their lawyers string out their cases as long as possible, and then demand that the "refugees" remain here because they have been in Australia so long (!!).

The media, for reasons of their own, will spin some sob-stories to make Australians feel guilty or sorry, as part of media campaigning to have the fake refugees stay here. The media will shamelessly use children and the sick for their purposes, because such propaganda will infer "How can you be so cruel as to deny these people?" – this is nothing more than a cynical ploy to play upon the charitable feelings of Australians.

The mass media have their own agenda. Overall, the media sector is staffed by cosmopolitan-internationalist types (patriotic or nationalistic journalists, except for a token few, are refused placement or are weeded out).

These media cosmopolitan "do-gooders", who can't see past their own blinkered and bigoted ideology, would have Australia swamped tomorrow with the teeming millions of the Third World – if we let them. Such stupidity, a part of which is advocating that we let in thousands of "refugees", would condemn Australia to environmental ruin, economic collapse, and social chaos. We would become what Lee Kuan Yew (Singapore's Prime Minister, 1959-1990) once predicted: the poor white trash of Asia.

Letting in fake refugees will have long-term disastrous consequences for Australia.

End the refugee racket!

Send the fake refugees back!
